HAVE YOU HEARD OF THE AVMA COMPANION ANIMAL AFTERCARE POLICY?

The AVMA has published a policy on aftercare,* providing guidelines to help make informed choices. The AVMA recognizes that an owner's attachment to their pet extends beyond death. The policy focuses on three areas: using trustworthy aftercare providers, maintaining the pet's remains in a condition suitable for return to the pet owner, and encouraging pre-planning with the family.

Families want their loved one's dignity to be preserved and are willing to pay to ensure this. Using an adapted body bag allows the team to feel consistent with their standards of practice and their empathy. It is a medical supply and its cost is passed on to the client.

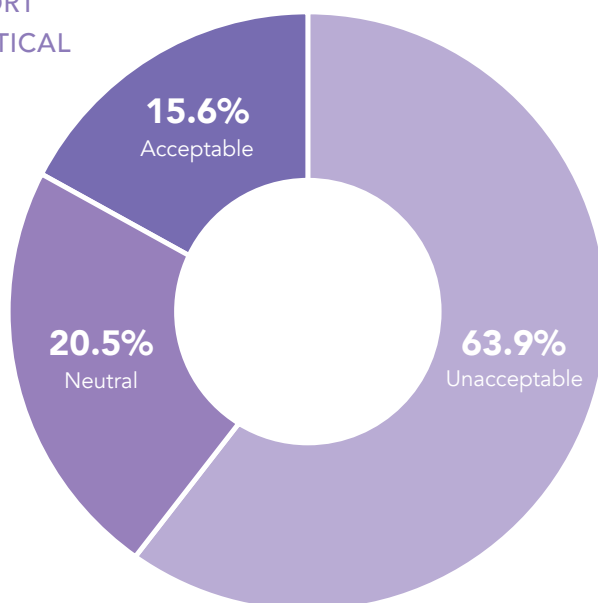

Only 15% of pet owners find the rubbish bag an acceptable way to store their pet after euthanasia.

"Deceased pets, whenever possible, should be maintained in a condition suitable for return to the owner or to the aftercare providers such that families may witness their pet's aftercare."
